

"Folding", an architectural proposition from Stijn Ank, build in Aspelare, Belgium.

We consider that this proposition breaks with "all previous variations on a same theme",

where current ways of "proposing" new things, happen under the safe umbrella of the assessment, where social conventions count as a direction for innovation !!!

This proposition of Stijn Ank does not reach the endless procession of variations on the same theme:

-transparency of the world and its residents,

-victory on the weight of material (deemed to be an obstacle in the freedom of desire).

Only a careless examination will leave you convinced with this.

Instead, it looks that the proposition joins next questions:

-starting from which minimal conditions is it possible to inhabit a "site" ?

-from which nature are the connections between a "place" and "a site" to live in ?

What does living in a site means, since the closure of the private is returned to its bourgeois misery ?

These questions should be among those who make our day !

Jean Stillemans